CSA Farms in the United States 1999-2000

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA):
A new partnership between farmers and consumers

Compiled by USDA's Sustainable Agriculture Network (SAN) and Alternative Farming Systems
Information Center (AFSIC) in collaboration with the CSA community

Why Community Supported Agriculture (CSA)?

Did you know that a tomato usually travels about 1,300 miles from where it is grown to your salad bowl? Consider an alternative.

Join a CSA farm, and join thousands of others who want to support local farmers while receiving delicious, healthy and, above all, fresh produce all season long. With your subscription, you purchase a "share" of the produce harvest, or a weekly portion from someone you come to know and trust. Some farms also offer fruit, herbs, flowers and other products.

For farmers, CSA offers a fair, steady source of income and a chance to talk directly with their customers. Many CSA farmers encourage members to get involved, so you and your family can work alongside "your" farmer to learn more about how he or she grows your food. Understanding the challenges facing family farmers in your community will make you a true partner in the local food system.

For more information about CSA and how you can support family farms, local food and a healthy environment, see:

- Sharing the Harvest: A Guide to Community Supported Agriculture. This handbook for both farmers and consumers covers everything from starting a CSA farm to how to build supportive communities. $24.95. Chelsea Green Publishing, (800) 639-4099; www.chelseagreen.com

USDA Programs

- USDA's Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (SARE) program offers grants and publishes books and bulletins for producers and agricultural professionals. (202) 720-5203; www.sare.org
- USDA's Alternative Farming Systems Information Center (AFSIC), one of several centers at the National Agricultural Library, locates, collects and provides information about sustainable agriculture, including CSA. (301) 504-6559; afsic@nal.usda.gov; www.nal.usda.gov/afsic

- USDA's Cooperative State Research, Education & Extension Service (CSREES) & state land grant universities support local extension offices. Contact the extension office in the government section of your phone book for information on farming & gardening.

This list of CSA farms was compiled in fall 1999. Due to the ever-changing nature of farming, this list is partial and subject to change. For the most updated information, see the Alternative Farming Systems Information Center list at www.nal.usda.gov/afsic/csa
